What do I want your department to do as the Bereau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement? That's easy, create and maintain regulations that will protect the environment and enforce those regulations against major oil companies regardless of any financial relationship you may have with them personally. In addition, energy from trees is just using wood. America gets how to use wood. Please don't let our oceans flood with hundreds of millions of gallons of gasoline and oil- though it does seem like that should be the entire purpose of your job, your affiliations are notably concerning.

"This is a business opportunity for you to engage with me on what you believe we ought to be about." -Scott Anthony Angelle LAGCOE 2017

I believe you ought to be about keeping oil companies accountable for their environmental impact and protecting the environment from further damage and mutation due to contamination. You are the current director of the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement so I suggest you act like it. No more "America is not yet ready to get all of its fuel from the birds and the bees and the flowers and the trees!".--a gross oversimplification of the energy solutions currently available. If you're scared for the current employees of oil companies, then get them into programs that prepare them for bigger, better industries like the solar, hydroelectric, wind, biofuel, and nuclear energy industries. Perhaps you could facilitate the contractual obligation for oil companies to work with the biofuel industry so that those limited resources can go further than they would otherwise. You are responsible for "promoting safety, protecting the environment and conserving resources through the regulatory oversight and enforcement of energy industry operations on the U.S. Outer Continental Shelf," it's literally in your job description. Do. Your. Job.

Have a lovely day, and a change of heart.

I just saw a video of a conference you gave a speech at. During it you gave out your personal cell number and said to call not text, as texts are official records.

Well, I just tried calling. Apparently you are either not home, or not awake.

I am sitting here on my oil rig and it looks to be leaking....how much should I pay to you to make this go away?

Dear Mr. Angelle... any future accidents that happen in the oil industry under your "watch"... you will have to live with... knowing that you let these companies destroy our environment and destroy the lives and livelihoods of thousands of citizens. So maybe you should stop cuddling up to the oil industry and do your real job... or have a conscience and resign.

The American people need only stricter oil rig safety standards, especially in regard to offshore drilling where oil spills constantly threaten the environment.

Asking executives to call you rather than text such that it is not on the public record is totally unethical and should be grounds for immediate termination as well as congressional investigation. 3:14 AM

Your duties are to the American people, not to a handful of wealthy executives.

Dear Mr Angelle

I am texting you because to note the importance of the public record in public policy decisions. As a citizen and taxpayer I believe it is okay to have a public discussion on the trade offs of public policy. For example you could discuss if saving 500 million dollars is worth 10-20 lives. Perhaps you could have a sliding scale based on whether they are public campaign contributors or CEOs

9:14 AM

(b) (6)

Oops accidents happen....Minimally the calculus that goes into these decisions jobs vs lives, profits versus beaches/fishing industry should be documented.

I do thank you for making yourself available with your phone number but do encourage texts. I will limit my texts to standard business hours.

9:17 AM

Have a good day

I saw your speech. I believe as a man in charge of oil safety and regulation, giving your phone number to oil industry leaders as a "business opportunity" and suggesting to call so it is not a "public record" should be a felony. You belong in federal prison. On a side note, you seem kinda slow in the head.

Dear Scott Angelle,

Please stop leaving us standard Americans out to dry and to pay for the negligence of oil companies. They are not looking out for our best interest, and if you truly value your civic duty you'll stop putting industry ahead of Americans.

You might have to try Lowe's or Home Depot I know that Lowe's has a RV section of used to. But all he's needing is like a plastic coupling for PVC coupling the size of his hose from what he was saying anyways and you should be able to find that at like said a hardware store. That still sucks though.

I don't feel that anyone should be in BSEE should be allowing deep sea drilling. You are there for safety, and you are failing. Also, for the record, taking bribes is against the law. You shouldn't be looking into "business opportunities " while in this position. Mr.Rogers would be ashamed of you. I know I am.

I want to find out how to drain the swamp and get some oily shrimp to eat. Also, is this part of the public record and how do I get me one of them oil worker hard hats like that guy eating to your left when you gave your cell # out to oil execs and told them not to text so it won't be part of the public record? Also, do you know how Donny Trump got rid of his bone spurs that got him out of the draft for Vietnam? I have written the The White House and asked but they won't tell me. I think he got his bone spurs to go away by eating oily shrimp. Do you know if that is the case? Please let me know. Thanks.

Michael Ruther here,

Man you are a serious embarrassment. Coming from a guy who teaches kids about America, I wish you cared more about principles over profits. Retire and move to the woods alone would ya?

For the public record you should resign your actions are gonna destroy the earth and as a human you should be ashamed. If you believe in Christianity I serverly doubt god would want you to poison the world he created, you're going to hell unless you change all the bullsh!t you're doing for these corrupt industries. Consider this a fair warning for your morality money isn't gonna be worth anything if the human race doesn't exist.

Mr. Angels, Why would you cation someone about being on the public record unless you knew they were going to say or suggest something illegal, and then refer to it as a "Business Opportunity". Please help me understand who you really work for, because it should be the American citizens and not the coal and oil industry.

Deep water drilling is one of the leading factors to climate change and because of your corrupt, incompetent, paid for, 1950's American, can't see the devastation it causes (bp oil spill which you were eager to start drilling just days after), selfish, uncompromising, and money hungry policies out environment will only get worse. I hope you enjoy eating tainted and toxic fish. I hope you enjoy a world that is faithfully depleting. I hope you enjoy an ever rising climate (like hell) I hope you enjoy the shitty world you have helped to create! Thank to you and people like you this America will never be great. People like you have you ruined it for every single person in the world. Congratulations on helping destruct one of the most prosperous and promising countries, if not the entire climate and world. I'm glad everyone in the world can die earlier and endure much more pain because of you. Thank you.

Jason

Good morning sir, I would ask that you please watch out for our environment more with your position than it seems you have been. Money is a construct that we humans have made up and we will have access to it no matter the state of things as long as we are alive but the earth is something that we could end up destroying and then we would have no where to live and collect money. Please talk with scientists who are non partisan to potentially help you in making the right decisions for our environment. Respectfully,

I am a concerned citizen who appreciates you providing your cell number to discuss your possible conflict of interest with oil drilling regulations and the the oil industry. Please do not increase the risk of environmental damage by reducing regulations on oil drilling. The citizens around the Gulf Coast do not need another Deep Water Horizon incident to occur again.

Well done you fucking idiot!! It's amazing how your accent makes you sound dumber than you actually are. Impossible!! Please understand that miraculously you found a position of power and need not abuse it. If you don't understand what is going on (clearly that's the case) like a kindergartner, raise your hand and ask for clarification. Good luck in politics moron!!!

Hello, this is Kenneth Farino, Jr. This text is part of the public record - you have openly encouraged oil industry executives to make business deals with you since the government is run by Mr. Trump and likeminded people who take advantage of the average American person. Do you make a pledge to care about actual American people's safety and do your job by regulating oil drilling, or will you continue to make under-the-table deals with oil executives? Silence, or no response, is an admission of continuing to work with the oil industry and failing to do the job you were hired to do.

Hello,

How do you sleep at night?

Recent IPCC report says we need net-zero emissions globally by 2050. All of the oil and gas needs to stay in the ground if we have any hope of averting catastrophic climate change.

12:20 AM

As a fellow human being, I'm asking you to please reconsider your priorities as a person in a position of power.

Hey! I know we're not supposed to text because of the public record and all, but I just wanted to reach out to see if I could help. I noticed that, in your recent speeches to us industry execs, you seemed to be lacking any structural support between your waist and your neck. I'm not sure how you were able to support that head that is so entirely full of fecal matter without a spine, and apparently lacking a gut as well. Anyways, be well.

Good evening, sir. I heard you were looking for ideas on oil business, am I correct?

Well, that's a long conversation that I would love to have, but eventually you will deplete like coal has depleted. I think you should look into renewable energy business options. I mean, it's renewable. See, you stand to make so much money looking towards the future if you choose to be the leader to do so. If you are not said leader that I took you for or that you state that you are, I wholly understand and I'm sorry for wasting your time. Thanks for reading!

You promise to drain the swamp but instead people like you are the reasons why swamps still exsist. Have some respect for yourself. It is a good thing to find better ways to help protect the environment. Oil spills are making it inhabitable for organisms to live in allowing for the destruction of the ecosystem. Good luck trying to find food when there are none left except hungry animals trying to eat us.

I am writing to remind you that you are a federal employee. As such your loyalty should be to the American people any not to those oil interests from whom, if you are not receiving a hefty paycheck today, you will surely receive one once the obvious taint of bribery has been removed by your leaving office. If you do not choose to execute your oath of office, an oath to the American people,

Your focus as head of BSEE should be to promote safety for workers and protection of the environment.

Maybe not so concerned about oil drilling profits. Yes, that's seems logical.

(b) (6)

Hard to look at, right? There are still reports coming in to this day that the fish caught in the Gulf of Mexico have tumors or are otherwise deformed. A single oil spill caused that. This effects not only the wildlife but all of the Americans who rely on agriculture as a source of food and income.

The schoolmaster was leaving the village, and ever ybody seemed sorry. The miller at Cresscombe lent him the small white tilted cart and horse to carry his goods to the city of his destination, about t wenty miles off, such a vehicle proving of quite s ufficient size for the departing teacher's effects . For the schoolhouse had been partly furnished by the managers, and the only cumbersome article pos sessed by the master, in addition to the packing-c ase of books, was a cottage piano that he had boug ht at an auction during the year in which he thoug ht of learning instrumental music. But the enthusi asm having waned he had never acquired any skill i n playing, and the purchased article had been a pe rpetual trouble to him ever since in moving house. The rector had gone away for the day, being a man who disliked the sight of changes. He did not mean to return till the evening, when the new school-t eacher would have arrived and settled in, and ever ything would be smooth again.

The blacksmith, the farm bailiff, and the schoolma ster himself were standing in perplexed attitudes in the parlour before the instrument. The master h ad remarked that even if he got it into the cart h e should not know what to do with it on his arriva I at Christminster, the city he was bound for, sin ce he was only going into temporary lodgings just at first.

A little boy of eleven, who had been thoughtfully assisting in the packing, joined the group of men, and as they rubbed their chins he spoke up, blush ing at the sound of his own voice: "Aunt have got a great fuel-house, and it could be put there, per haps, till you've found a place to settle in, sir."

"A proper good notion," said the blacksmith.

It was decided that a deputation should wait on the boy's aunt—an old maiden resident—and ask her if she would house the piano till Mr. Phillotson should send for it. The smith and the bailiff started to see about the practicability of the suggested shelter, and the boy and the schoolmaster were lef t standing alone.

"Sorry I am going, Jude?" asked the latter kindly. Tears rose into the boy's eyes, for he was not amo ng the regular day scholars, who came unromantical ly close to the schoolmaster's life, but one who h ad attended the night school only during the prese nt teacher's term of office. The regular scholars, if the truth must be told, stood at the present m oment afar off, like certain historic disciples, i ndisposed to any enthusiastic volunteering of aid. The boy awkwardly opened the book he held in his h and, which Mr. Phillotson had bestowed on him as a parting gift, and admitted that he was sorry.

"So am I," said Mr. Phillotson.

"Why do you go, sir?" asked the boy.

"Ah—that would be a long story. You wouldn't under stand my reasons, Jude. You will, perhaps, when yo u are older."

"I think I should now, sir."

"Well—don't speak of this everywhere. You know what a university is, and a university degree? It is the necessary hallmark of a man who wants to do anything in teaching. My scheme, or dream, is to be a university graduate, and then to be ordained. By going to live at Christminster, or near it, I shall be at headquarters, so to speak, and if my scheme is practicable at all, I consider that being on the spot will afford me a better chance of carrying it out than I should have elsewhere."

The smith and his companion returned. Old Miss Faw ley's fuel-house was dry, and eminently practicabl e; and she seemed willing to give the instrument s tanding-room there. It was accordingly left in the school till the evening, when more hands would be available for removing it; and the schoolmaster g ave a final glance round.

The boy Jude assisted in loading some small articles, and at nine o'clock Mr. Phillotson mounted bes ide his box of books and other impedimenta, and bade his friends good-bye.

"I shan't forget you, Jude," he said, smiling, as the cart moved off. "Be a good boy, remember; and be kind to animals and birds, and read all you can . And if ever you come to Christminster remember y ou hunt me out for old acquaintance' sake." The cart creaked across the green, and disappeared round the corner by the rectory-house. The boy re turned to the draw-well at the edge of the greensw ard, where he had left his buckets when he went to help his patron and teacher in the loading. There was a quiver in his lip now and after opening the well-cover to begin lowering the bucket he paused and leant with his forehead and arms against the framework, his face wearing the fixity of a though tful child's who has felt the pricks of life somew hat before his time. The well into which he was lo oking was as ancient as the village itself, and fr om his present position appeared as a long circula r perspective ending in a shining disk of quiverin g water at a distance of a hundred feet down. Ther e was a lining of green moss near the top, and nea rer still the hart's-tongue fern.

He said to himself, in the melodramatic tones of a whimsical boy, that the schoolmaster had drawn at that well scores of times on a morning like this, and would never draw there any more. "I've seen h im look down into it, when he was tired with his d rawing, just as I do now, and when he rested a bit before carrying the buckets home! But he was too clever to bide here any longer—a small sleepy place like this!"

A tear rolled from his eye into the depths of the well. The morning was a little foggy, and the boy's breathing unfurled itself as a thicker fog upon the still and heavy air. His thoughts were interrupted by a sudden outcry:

"Bring on that water, will ye, you idle young harl ican!"

It came from an old woman who had emerged from her door towards the garden gate of a green-thatched cottage not far off. The boy quickly waved a signa I of assent, drew the water with what was a great effort for one of his stature, landed and emptied the big bucket into his own pair of smaller ones, and pausing a moment for breath, started with them across the patch of clammy greensward whereon the well stood—nearly in the centre of the little vil lage, or rather hamlet of Marygreen. It was as old-fashioned as it was small, and it re sted in the lap of an undulating upland adjoining the North Wessex downs. Old as it was, however, th e well-shaft was probably the only relic of the lo cal history that remained absolutely unchanged. Ma ny of the thatched and dormered dwelling-houses ha d been pulled down of late years, and many trees f elled on the green. Above all, the original church , hump-backed, wood-turreted, and quaintly hipped, had been taken down, and either cracked up into h eaps of road-metal in the lane, or utilized as pig -sty walls, garden seats, guard-stones to fences, and rockeries in the flower-beds of the neighbourh ood. In place of it a tall new building of modern Gothic design, unfamiliar to English eyes, had bee n erected on a new piece of ground by a certain ob literator of historic records who had run down fro m London and back in a day. The site whereon so lo ng had stood the ancient temple to the Christian d ivinities was not even recorded on the green and I evel grass-plot that had immemorially been the chu rchyard, the obliterated graves being commemorated by eighteen-penny cast-iron crosses warranted to last five years.

Slender as was Jude Fawley's frame he bore the two brimming house-buckets of water to the cottage wi thout resting. Over the door was a little rectangu lar piece of blue board, on which was painted in y ellow letters, "Drusilla Fawley, Baker." Within the little lead panes of the window—this being one of the few old houses left—were five bottles of swe ets, and three buns on a plate of the willow pattern.

While emptying the buckets at the back of the hous e he could hear an animated conversation in progre ss within-doors between his great-aunt, the Drusil la of the sign-board, and some other villagers. Ha ving seen the school-master depart, they were summ ing up particulars of the event, and indulging in predictions of his future.

"And who's he?" asked one, comparatively a strange r, when the boy entered.

"Well ye med ask it, Mrs. Williams. He's my greatnephew—come since you was last this way." The old inhabitant who answered was a tall, gaunt woman, w ho spoke tragically on the most trivial subject, a nd gave a phrase of her conversation to each audit or in turn. "He come from Mellstock, down in South Wessex, about a year ago—worse luck for 'n, Belin da" (turning to the right) "where his father was I iving, and was took wi' the shakings for death, an d died in two days, as you know, Caroline" (turnin g to the left). "It would ha' been a blessing if G oddy-mighty had took thee too, wi' thy mother and father, poor useless boy! But I've got him here to stay with me till I can see what's to be done wit h un, though I am obliged to let him earn any penn y he can. Just now he's a-scaring of birds for Far mer Troutham. It keeps him out of mischty. Why do ye turn away, Jude?" she continued, as the boy, fe eling the impact of their glances like slaps upon his face, moved aside.

The local washerwoman replied that it was perhaps a very good plan of Miss or Mrs. Fawley's (as they called her indifferently) to have him with her—"t o kip 'ee company in your loneliness, fetch water, shet the winder-shetters o' nights, and help in t he bit o' baking."

Miss Fawley doubted it. ... "Why didn't ye get the s choolmaster to take 'ee to Christminster wi' un, a nd make a scholar of 'ee," she continued, in frown ing pleasantry. "I'm sure he couldn't ha' took a b etter one. The boy is crazy for books, that he is. It runs in our family rather. His cousin Sue is j ust the same—so I've heard; but I have not seen th e child for years, though she was born in this pla ce, within these four walls, as it happened. My ni ece and her husband, after they were married, didn 'get a house of their own for some year or more; and then they only had one till—Well, I won't go i nto that. Jude, my child, don't you ever marry. 'T isn't for the Fawleys to take that step any more. She, their only one, was like a child o' my own, B elinda, till the split come! Ah, that a little mai d should know such changes!"

Jude, finding the general attention again centerin g on himself, went out to the bakehouse, where he ate the cake provided for his breakfast. The end o f his spare time had now arrived, and emerging from the garden by getting over the hedge at the back he pursued a path northward, till he came to a wide and lonely depression in the general level of the upland, which was sown as a corn-field. This vast concave was the scene of his labours for Mr Troutham the farmer, and he descended into the midst of it.

The brown surface of the field went right up towar ds the sky all round, where it was lost by degrees in the mist that shut out the actual verge and ac centuated the solitude. The only marks on the unif ormity of the scene were a rick of last year's pro duce standing in the midst of the arable, the rook s that rose at his approach, and the path athwart the fallow by which he had come, trodden now by he hardly knew whom, though once by many of his own dead family.

"How ugly it is here!" he murmured.

The fresh harrow-lines seemed to stretch like the channellings in a piece of new corduroy, lending a meanly utilitarian air to the expanse, taking awa y its gradations, and depriving it of all history beyond that of the few recent months, though to ev ery clod and stone there really attached associati ons enough and to spare—echoes of songs from ancie nt harvest-days, of spoken words, and of sturdy de eds. Every inch of ground had been the site, first or last, of energy, gaiety, horse-play, bickering s, weariness. Groups of gleaners had squatted in t he sun on every square yard. Love-matches that had populated the adjoining hamlet had been made up t here between reaping and carrying. Under the hedge which divided the field from a distant plantation girls had given themselves to lovers who would no t turn their heads to look at them by the next har vest; and in that ancient cornfield many a man had made love-promises to a woman at whose voice he h ad trembled by the next seed-time after fulfilling them in the church adjoining. But this neither Ju de nor the rooks around him considered. For them i t was a lonely place, possessing, in the one view, only the quality of a work-ground, and in the oth er that of a granary good to feed in. The boy stood under the rick before mentioned, and every few seconds used his clacker or rattle bris kly. At each clack the rooks left off pecking, and rose and went away on their leisurely wings, burn ished like tassets of mail, afterwards wheeling ba ck and regarding him warily, and descending to fee

He sounded the clacker till his arm ached, and at length his heart grew sympathetic with the birds' thwarted desires. They seemed, like himself, to be living in a world which did not want them. Why sh ould he frighten them away? They took upon more an d more the aspect of gentle friends and pensioners—the only friends he could claim as being in the I east degree interested in him, for his aunt had of ten told him that she was not. He ceased his rattling, and they alighted anew.

"Poor little dears!" said Jude, aloud. "You shall have some dinner—you shall. There is enough for us all. Farmer Troutham can afford to let you have s ome. Eat, then my dear little birdies, and make a good meal!"

They stayed and ate, inky spots on the nut-brown s oil, and Jude enjoyed their appetite. A magic thre ad of fellow-feeling united his own life with thei rs. Puny and sorry as those lives were, they much resembled his own.

His clacker he had by this time thrown away from h im, as being a mean and sordid instrument, offensi ve both to the birds and to himself as their frien d. All at once he became conscious of a smart blow upon his buttocks, followed by a loud clack, whic h announced to his surprised senses that the clack er had been the instrument of offence used. The birds and Jude started up simultaneously, and the dazed eyes of the latter beheld the farmer in person, the great Troutham himself, his red face glaring down upon Jude's cowering frame, the clacker swinging in his hand.

"So it's 'Eat my dear birdies,' is it, young man?
'Eat, dear birdies,' indeed! I'll tickle your bree
ches, and see if you say, 'Eat, dear birdies,' aga in in a hurry! And you've been idling at the schoo lmaster's too, instead of coming here, ha'n't ye, hey? That's how you earn your sixpence a day for k eeping the rooks off my corn!"

Whilst saluting Jude's ears with this impassioned rhetoric, Troutham had seized his left hand with h is own left, and swinging his slim frame round him at arm's-length, again struck Jude on the hind parts with the flat side of Jude's own rattle, till the field echoed with the blows, which were delive red once or twice at each revolution.

"Don't 'ee, sir—please don't 'ee!" cried the whirl ing child, as helpless under the centrifugal tende ncy of his person as a hooked fish swinging to lan d, and beholding the hill, the rick, the plantatio n, the path, and the rooks going round and round h im in an amazing circular race. "I—I sir—only mean t that—there was a good crop in the ground—I saw 'em sow it—and the rooks could h

Not a soul was visible on the hedgeless highway, or on either side of it, and the white road seemed to ascend and diminish till it joined the sky. At the very top it was crossed at right angles by a green "ridgeway"—the Ickneild Street and original Roman road through the district. This ancient track ran east and west for many miles, and down almost to within living memory had been used for driving flocks and herds to fairs and markets. But it was now neglected and overgrown.

The boy had never before strayed so far north as this from the nestling hamlet in which he had been deposited by the carrier from a railway station so uthward, one dark evening some few months earlier, and till now he had had no suspicion that such a wide, flat, low-lying country lay so near at hand, under the very verge of his upland world. The who le northern semicircle between east and west, to a distance of forty or fifty miles, spread itself before him; a bluer, moister atmosphere, evidently, than that he breathed up here.

Not far from the road stood a weather-beaten old b arn of reddish-grey brick and tile. It was known a s the Brown House by the people of the locality. H e was about to pass it when he perceived a ladder against the eaves; and the reflection that the hig her he got, the further he could see, led Jude to stand and regard it. On the slope of the roof two men were repairing the tiling. He turned into the ridgeway and drew towards the barn.

When he had wistfully watched the workmen for some time he took courage, and ascended the ladder til I he stood beside them.

"Well, my lad, and what may you want up here?"
"I wanted to know where the city of Christminster is, if you please."

"Christminster is out across there, by that clump. You can see it—at least you can on a clear day. A h, no, you can't now."

The other tiler, glad of any kind of diversion fro m the monotony of his labour, had also turned to I ook towards the quarter designated. "You can't oft en see it in weather like this," he said. "The tim e I've noticed it is when the sun is going down in a blaze of flame, and it looks like—I don't know what."

"The heavenly Jerusalem," suggested the serious ur chin.

"Ay—though I should never ha' thought of it myself . ... But I can't see no Christminster to-day." The boy strained his eyes also; yet neither could he see the far-off city. He descended from the bar n, and abandoning Christminster with the versatili ty of his age he walked along the ridge-track, loo king for any natural objects of interest that migh t lie in the banks thereabout. When he repassed th e barn to go back to Marygreen he observed that th e ladder was still in its place, but that the men had finished their day's work and gone away. It was waning towards evening; there was still a f aint mist, but it had cleared a little except in t he damper tracts of subjacent country and along th e river-courses. He thought again of Christminster , and wished, since he had come two or three miles from his aunt's house on purpose, that he could h ave seen for once this attractive city of which he had been told. But even if he waited here it was hardly likely that the air would clear before nigh t. Yet he was loth to leave the spot, for the nort hern expanse became lost to view on retreating tow ards the village only a few hundred yards. He ascended the ladder to have one more look at th e point the men had designated, and perched himsel f on the highest rung, overlying the tiles. He mig ht not be able to come so far as this for many day s. Perhaps if he prayed, the wish to see Christmin ster might be forwarded. People said that, if you prayed, things sometimes came to you, even though they sometimes did not. He had read in a tract tha t a man who had begun to build a church, and had n o money to finish it, knelt down and prayed, and t he money came in by the next post. Another man tri ed the same experiment, and the money did not come ; but he found afterwards that the breeches he kne It in were made by a wicked Jew. This was not disc ouraging, and turning on the ladder Jude knelt on the third rung, where, resting against those above it, he prayed that the mist might rise. He then seated himself again, and waited. In the c ourse of ten or fifteen minutes the thinning mist dissolved altogether from the northern horizon, as it had already done elsewhere, and about a quarte r of an hour before the time of sunset the westwar d clouds parted, the sun's position being partiall y uncovered, and the beams streaming out in visible e lines between two bars of slaty cloud. The boy i mmediately looked back in the old direction. Some way within the limits of the stretch of lands cape, points of light like the topaz gleamed. The air increased in transparency with the lapse of mi nutes, till the topaz points showed themselves to be the vanes, windows, wet roof slates, and other shining spots upon the spires, domes, freestone-wo rk, and varied outlines that were faintly revealed . It was Christminster, unquestionably; either dir ectly seen, or miraged in the peculiar atmosphere. The spectator gazed on and on till the windows and vanes lost their shine, going out almost suddenly like extinguished candles. The vague city became veiled in mist. Turning to the west, he saw that t he sun had disappeared. The foreground of the scen e had grown funereally dark, and near objects put on the hues and shapes of chimaeras. He anxiously descended the ladder, and started hom ewards at a run, trying not to think of giants, He rne the Hunter, Apollyon lying in wait for Christi an, or of the captain with the bleeding hole in hi s forehead and the corpses round him that remutini ed every night on board the bewitched ship. He kne w that he had grown out of belief in these horrors

, yet he was glad when he saw the church tower and the lights in the cottage windows, even though th is was not the home of his birth, and his great-au nt did not care much about him.

Inside and round about that old woman's "shop" win dow, with its twenty-four little panes set in lead -work, the glass of some of them oxidized with age , so that you could hardly see the poor penny articles exhibited within, and forming part of a stock which a strong man could have carried, Jude had h is outer being for some long tideless time. But hi s dreams were as gigantic as his surroundings were small.

Through the solid barrier of cold cretaceous uplan d to the northward he was always beholding a gorge ous city—the fancied place he had likened to the n ew Jerusalem, though there was perhaps more of the painter's imagination and less of the diamond mer chant's in his dreams thereof than in those of the Apocalyptic writer. And the city acquired a tangi bility, a permanence, a hold on his life, mainly f rom the one nucleus of fact that the man for whose knowledge and purposes he had so much reverence w as actually living there; not only so, but living among the more thoughtful and mentally shining one s therein.

In sad wet seasons, though he knew it must rain at Christminster too, he could hardly believe that i t rained so drearily there. Whenever he could get away from the confines of the hamlet for an hour o r two, which was not often, he would steal off to the Brown House on the hill and strain his eyes pe rsistently; sometimes to be rewarded by the sight of a dome or spire, at other times by a little smo ke, which in his estimate had some of the mysticis m of incense.

Then the day came when it suddenly occurred to him that if he ascended to the point of view after da rk, or possibly went a mile or two further, he wou

Id see the night lights of the city. It would be n ecessary to come back alone, but even that conside ration did not deter him, for he could throw a lit tle manliness into his mood, no doubt.

The project was duly executed. It was not late whe n he arrived at the place of outlook, only just af ter dusk, but a black north-east sky, accompanied by a wind from the same quarter, made the occasion dark enough. He was rewarded; but wha

Walking somewhat slowly by reason of his concentration, the boy—an ancient man in some phases of tho ught, much younger than his years in others—was overtaken by a light-footed pedestrian, whom, notwit hstanding the gloom, he could perceive to be wearing an extraordinarily tall hat, a swallow-tailed coat, and a watch-chain that danced madly and threw around scintillations of sky-light as its owners wung along upon a pair of thin legs and noiseless boots. Jude, beginning to feel lonely, endeavoured to keep up with him.

"Well, my man! I'm in a hurry, so you'll have to w alk pretty fast if you keep alongside of me. Do yo u know who I am?"

"Yes, I think. Physician Vilbert?"

"Ah—I'm known everywhere, I see! That comes of being a public benefactor."

Vilbert was an itinerant quack-doctor, well known to the rustic population, and absolutely unknown t o anybody else, as he, indeed, took care to be, to avoid inconvenient investigations. Cottagers form ed his only patients, and his Wessex-wide repute w as among them alone. His position was humbler and his field more obscure than those of the quacks wi th capital and an organized system of advertising. He was, in fact, a survival. The distances he tra versed on foot were enormous, and extended nearly the whole length and breadth of Wessex. Jude had o ne day seen him selling a pot of coloured lard to an old woman as a certain cure for a bad leg, the woman arranging to pay a guinea, in instalments of a shilling a fortnight, for the precious salve, w hich, according to the physician, could only be ob tained from a particular animal which grazed on Mo unt Sinai, and was to be captured only at great ri sk to life and limb. Jude, though he already had h is doubts about this gentleman's medicines, felt h im to be unquestionably a travelled personage, and one who might be a trustworthy source of informat ion on matters not strictly professional.

"I s'pose you've been to Christminster, Physician?

"I have—many times," replied the long thin man. "T hat's one of my centres."

"It's a wonderful city for scholarship and religion?"

"You'd say so, my boy, if you'd seen it. Why, the very sons of the old women who do the washing of the colleges can talk in Latin—not good Latin, that I admit, as a critic: dog-Latin—cat-Latin, as we used to call it in my undergraduate days."

"And Greek?"

"Well—that's more for the men who are in training for bishops, that they may be able to read the New Testament in the original."

"I want to learn Latin and Greek myself."

"A lofty desire. You must get a grammar of each to ngue."

"I mean to go to Christminster some day."

"Whenever you do, you say that Physician Vilbert i s the only proprietor of those celebrated pills th at infallibly cure all disorders of the alimentary system, as well as asthma and shortness of breath . Two and threepence a box—specially licensed by t he government stamp."

"Can you get me the grammars if I promise to say i t hereabout?"

"I'll sell you mine with pleasure—those I used as a student."

"Oh, thank you, sir!" said Jude gratefully, but in gasps, for the amazing speed of the physician's w alk kept him in a dog-trot which was giving him a stitch in the side.

"I think you'd better drop behind, my young man. Now I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll get you the grammars, and give you a first lesson, if you'll remember, at every house in the village, to recommend Physician Vilbert's golden ointment, life-drops, and female pills."

"Where will you be with the grammars?"

"I shall be passing here this day fortnight at pre cisely this hour of five-and-twenty minutes past s even. My movements are as truly timed as those of the planets in their courses."

"Here I'll be to meet you," said Jude.

"With orders for my medicines?"

"Yes, Physician."

Jude then dropped behind, waited a few minutes to recover breath, and went home with a consciousness of having struck a blow for Christminster.

Through the intervening fortnight he ran about and smiled outwardly at his inward thoughts, as if th ey were people meeting and nodding to him—smiled w ith that singularly beautiful irradiation which is seen to spread on young faces at the inception of some glorious idea, as if a supernatural lamp wer e held inside their transparent natures, giving ri se to the flattering fancy that heaven lies about them then.

He honestly performed his promise to the man of ma ny cures, in whom he now sincerely believed, walking miles hither and thither among the surrounding hamlets as the Physician's agent in advance. On the evening appointed he stood motionless on the plateau, at the place where he had parted from Vilber t, and there awaited his approach. The road-physician was fairly up to time; but, to the surprise of Jude on striking into his pace, which the pedestrian did not diminish by a single unit of force, the latter seemed hardly to recognize his young companion, though with the lapse of the fortnight the evenings had grown light. Jude thought it might perhaps be owing to his wearing another hat, and he saluted the physician with dignity.

"Well, my boy?" said the latter abstractedly.

"I've come," said Jude.

"You? who are you? Oh yes—to be sure! Got any orders, lad?"

"Yes." And Jude told him the names and addresses of the cottagers who were willing to test the virtu es of the world-renowned pills and salve. The quac k mentally registered these with great care.

"And the Latin and Greek grammars?" Jude's voice t rembled with anxiety.

"What about them?"

"You were to bring me yours, that you used before you took your degree."

"Ah, yes, yes! Forgot all about it—all! So many li ves depending on my attention, you see, my man, th at I can't give so much thought as I would like to other things."

Jude controlled himself sufficiently long to make sure of the truth; and he repeated, in a voice of dry misery, "You haven't brought 'em!"

"No. But you must get me some more orders from sic k people, and I'll bring the grammars next time." Jude dropped behind. He was an unsophisticated boy , but the gift of sudden insight which is sometime s vouchsafed to children showed him all at once wh at shoddy humanity the quack was made of. There wa s to be no intellectual light from this source. The leaves dropped from his imaginary crown of laure I; he turned to a gate, leant against it, and cried bitterly.

The disappointment was followed by an interval of blankness. He might, perhaps, have obtained gramma rs from Alfredston, but to do that required money, and a knowledge of what books to order; and thoug h physically comfortable, he was in such absolute dependence as to be without a farthing of his own. At this date Mr. Phillotson sent for his pianofort e, and it gave Jude a lead. Why should he not writ e to the schoolmaster, and ask him to be so kind a s to get him the grammars in Christminster? He mig ht slip a letter inside the case of the instrument, and it would be sure to reach the desired eyes. Why not ask him to send any old second-hand copies, which would have the charm of being mellowed by the university atmosphere?

To tell his aunt of his intention would be to defe

at it. It was necessary to act alone.

After a further consideration of a few days he did act, and on the day of the piano's departure, whi ch happened to be his next birthday, clandestinely placed the letter inside the packing-case, direct ed to his much-admired friend, being afraid to rev eal the operation to his aunt Drusilla, lest she s hould discover his motive, and compel him to aband on his scheme.

The piano was despatched, and Jude waited days and weeks, calling every morning at the cottage post office before his great-aunt was stirring. At last a packet did indeed arrive at the village, and he saw from the ends of it that it contained two thin books. He took it away into a lonely place, and sat down on a felled elm to open it.

Ever since his first ecstasy or vision of Christmi

nster and its possibilities, Jude had meditated mu ch and curiously on the probable sort of proc

During the three or four succeeding years a quaint and singular vehicle might have been discerned mo ving along the lanes and by-roads near Marygreen, driven in a quaint and singular way.

In the course of a month or two after the receipt of the books Jude had grown callous to the shabby trick played him by the dead languages. In fact, h is disappointment at the nature of those tongues h ad, after a while, been the means of still further glorifying the erudition of Christminster. To acq uire languages, departed or living in spite of suc h obstinacies as he now knew them inherently to po ssess, was a herculean performance which gradually led him on to a greater interest in it than in th e presupposed patent process. The mountain-weight of material under which the ideas lay in those dus ty volumes called the classics piqued him into a d ogged, mouselike subtlety of attempt to move it pi ecemeal.

He had endeavoured to make his presence tolerable to his crusty maiden aunt by assisting her to the best of his ability, and the business of the littl e cottage bakery had grown in consequence. An aged horse with a hanging head had been purchased for eight pounds at a sale, a creaking cart with a whi ty-brown tilt obtained for a few pounds more, and in this turn-out it became Jude's business thrice a week to carry loaves of bread to the villagers a nd solitary cotters immediately round Marygreen. The singularity aforesaid lay, after all, less in the conveyance itself than in Jude's manner of con ducting it along its route. Its interior was the s cene of most of Jude's education by "private study ." As soon as the horse had learnt the road and th e houses at which he was to pause awhile, the boy, seated in front, would slip the reins over his ar m, ingeniously fix open, by means of a strap attac hed to the tilt, the volume he was reading, spread the dictionary on his knees, and plunge into the simpler passages from Caesar, Virgil, or Horace, a s the case might be, in his purblind stumbling way , and with an expenditure of labour that would hav e made a tender-hearted pedagogue shed tears; yet somehow getting at the meaning of what he read, an d divining rather than beholding the spirit of the original, which often to his mind was something e lse than that which he was taught to look for. The only copies he had been able to lay hands on w ere old Delphin editions, because they were supers eded, and therefore cheap. But, bad for idle schoo lboys, it did so happen that they were passably go od for him. The hampered and lonely itinerant cons cientiously covered up the marginal readings, and used them merely on points of construction, as he would have used a comrade or tutor who should have happened to be passing by. And though Jude may ha ve had little chance of becoming a scholar by thes e rough and ready means, he was in the way of gett ing into the groove he wished to follow.

While he was busied with these ancient pages, which had already been thumbed by hands possibly in the grave, digging out the thoughts of these minds so remote yet so near, the bony old horse pursued his rounds, and Jude would be aroused from the woes of Dido by the stoppage of his cart and the voice of some old woman crying, "Two to-day, baker, and I return this stale one."

He was frequently met in the lanes by pedestrians and others without his seeing them, and by degrees the people of the neighbourhood began to talk about his method of combining work and play (such the y considered his reading to be), which, though probably convenient enough to himself, was not altoge ther a safe proceeding for other travellers along the same roads. There were murmurs. Then a private resident of an adjoining place informed the local policeman that the baker's boy should not be allowed to read while driving, and insisted that it was the constable's duty to catch him in the act, and take him to the police court at Alfredston, and get him fined for dangerous practices on the highw ay. The policeman thereupon lay in wait for Jude, and one day accosted him and cautioned him. As Jude had to get up at three o'clock in the morn ing to heat the oven, and mix and set in the bread that he distributed later in the day, he was obli ged to go to bed at night immediately after laying the sponge; so that if he could not read his clas sics on the highways he could hardly study at all. The only thing to be done was, therefore, to keep a sharp eye ahead and around him as well as he co uld in the circumstances, and slip away his books as soon as anybody loomed in the distance, the pol iceman in particular. To do that official justice, he did not put himself much in the way of Jude's bread-cart, considering that in such a lonely dist rict the chief danger was to Jude himself, and oft en on seeing the white tilt over the hedges he wou ld move in another direction.

On a day when Fawley was getting quite advanced, b eing now about sixteen, and had been stumbling thr ough the "Carmen Sæculare," on his way home, he fo und himself to be passing over the high edge of th e plateau by the Brown House. The light had change d, and it was the sense of this which had caused h im to look up. The sun was going down, and the ful I moon was rising simultaneously behind the woods in the opposite quarter. His mind had become so im pregnated with the poem that, in a moment of the s ame impulsive emotion which years before had cause d him to kneel on the ladder, he stopped the horse , alighted, and glancing round to see that nobody was in sight, knelt down on the roadside bank with open book. He turned first to the shiny goddess, who seemed to look so softly and critically at his doings, then to the disappearing luminary on the other hand, as he began:

"Phœbe silvarumque potens Diana!"

9:34 PM

The horse stood still till he had finished the hym n, which Jude repeated under the sway of a polythe istic fancy that he would never have thought of hu mouring in broad daylight.

Reaching home, he mused over his curious superstit ion, innate or acquired, in doing this, and the st range forgetfulness which had led to such a lapse from common sense and custom in one who wished, ne xt to being a scholar, to be a Christian divine. I t had all come of reading heathen works exclusivel y. The more he thought of it the more convinced he was of his inconsistency. He began to wonder whet her he could be reading quite the right books for his object in life. Certainly there seemed little harmony between this pagan literature and the medi æval colleges at Christminster, that ecclesiastica I romance in stone.

Ultimately he decided that in his sheer love of re ading he had taken up a wrong emotion for a Christ ian young man. He had dabbled in Clarke's Homer, b ut had never yet worked much at the New Testament in the Greek, though he possessed a copy, obtained by post from a second-hand bookseller. He abandon ed the now familiar lonic for a new dialect, and f or a long time onward limited his reading almost e ntirely to the Gospels and Epistles in Griesbach's text. Moreover, on going into Alfredston one day, he was introduced to patristic literature by find ing at the bookseller's some volumes of the Father s which had been left behind by an insolvent clerg yman of the neighbourhood.

As another outcome of this change of groove he vis ited on Sundays all the churches within a walk, an d deciphered the Latin inscriptions on fifteenth-c entury brasses and tombs. On one of these pilgrima ges he met with a hunch-backed old woman of great intelligence, who read everything she could lay he r hands on, and she told him more yet of the roman tic charms of the city of light and lore. Thither he resolved as firmly as ever to go.

But how live in that city? At present he had no in come at all. He had no trade or calling of any dig nity or stability whatever on which he could subsist while carrying out an intellectual labour which might spread over many years.

What was most required by citizens? Food, clothing, and shelter. An income from any work in preparing the first would be too meagre; for making the se cond he felt a distaste; the preparation of the third requisite he inclined to. They built in a city; therefore he would learn to build. He thought of his unknown uncle, his cousin Susanna's father, an ecclesiastical worker in metal, and somehow medi æval art in any material was a trade for which he had rather a fancy. He could not go far wrong in following his uncle's footsteps, and engaging himse If awhile with the carcases that contained the schoolar souls.

As a preliminary he obtained some small blocks of freestone, metal not being available, and suspending his studies awhile, occupied his spare half-hours in copying the heads and capitals in his parish church.

There was a stone-mason of a humble kind in Alfred ston, and as soon as he had found a substitute for himself in his aunt's little business, he offered his services to this man for a trifling wage. Her e Jude had the opportunity of learning at least the rudiments of freestone-working. Some time later he went to a church-builder in the same place, and under the architect's direction became handy at restoring the dilapidated masonries of several vill age churches round about.

Not forgetting that he was only following up this handicraft as a prop to lean on while he prepared those greater engines which he flattered himself w ould be better fitted for him, he yet was interest ed in his pursuit on its own account. He now had I odgings during the week in the little town, whence he returned to Marygreen village every Saturday e

At this memorable date of his life he was, one Sat urday, returning from Alfredston to Marygreen abou t three o'clock in the afternoon. It was fine, war m, and soft summer weather, and he walked with his tools at his back, his little chisels clinking fa intly against the larger ones in his basket. It be ing the end of the week he had left work early, an d had come out of the town by a round-about route which he did not usually frequent, having promised to call at a flour-mill near Cresscombe to execut e a commission for his aunt.

He was in an enthusiastic mood. He seemed to see h is way to living comfortably in Christminster in t he course of a year or two, and knocking at the do ors of one of those strongholds of learning of whi ch he had dreamed so much. He might, of course, ha ve gone there now, in some capacity or other, but he preferred to enter the city with a little more assurance as to means than he could be said to fee I at present. A warm self-content suffused him whe n he considered what he had already done. Now and then as he went along he turned to face the peeps of country on either side of him. But he hardly sa w them; the act was an automatic repetition of wha t he had been accustomed to do when less occupied; and the one matter which really engaged him was t he mental estimate of his progress thus far.

"I have acquired quite an average student's power to read the common ancient classics, Latin in part icular." This was true, Jude possessing a facility in that language which enabled him with great eas e to himself to beguile his lonely walks by imagin ary conversations therein.

"I have read two books of the Iliad, besides being pretty familiar with passages such as the speech of Phœnix in the ninth book, the fight of Hector a nd Ajax in the fourteenth, the appearance of Achil les unarmed and his heavenly armour in the eightee nth, and the funeral games in the twenty-third. I have also done some Hesiod, a little scrap of Thuc ydides, and a lot of the Greek Testament... I wish there was only one dialect all the same.

"I have done some mathematics, including the first six and the eleventh and twelfth books of Euclid; and algebra as far as simple equations.

"I know something of the Fathers, and something of Roman and English history.

"These things are only a beginning. But I shall no t make much farther advance here, from the difficu lty of getting books. Hence I must next concentrat e all my energies on settling in Christminster. On ce there I shall so advance, with the assistance I shall there get, that my present knowledge will a ppear to me but as childish ignorance. I must save money, and I will; and one of those colleges shal I open its doors to me—shall welcome whom now it w ould spurn, if I wait twenty years for the welcome

"I'll be D.D. before I have done!"

And then he continued to dream, and thought he might become even a bishop by leading a pure, energet ic, wise, Christian life. And what an example he would set! If his income were £5000 a year, he would give away £4500 in one form and another, and live sumptuously (for him) on the remainder. Well, on second thoughts, a bishop was absurd. He would draw the line at an archdeacon. Perhaps a man could be as good and as learned and as useful in the cap acity of archdeacon as in that of bishop. Yet he thought of the bishop again.

"Meanwhile I will read, as soon as I am settled in Christminster, the books I have not been able to get hold of here: Livy, Tacitus, Herodotus, Æschyl us, Sophocles, Aristophanes—"

"Ha, ha, ha! Hoity-toity!" The sounds were express ed in light voices on the other side of the hedge, but he did not notice them. His thoughts went on: "—Euripides, Plato, Aristotle, Lucretius, Epictetu s, Seneca, Antoninus. Then I must master other things: the Fathers thoroughly; Bede and ecclesiastic al history generally; a smattering of Hebrew—I only know the letters as yet—"

"Hoity-toity!"

"—but I can work hard. I have staying power in abundance, thank God! and it is that which tells... Yes, Christminster shall be my Alma Mater; and I'll be her beloved son, in whom she shall be well pleased."

In his deep concentration on these transactions of the future Jude's walk had slackened, and he was now standing quite still, looking at the ground as though the future were thrown thereon by a magic lantern. On a sudden something smacked him sharply in the ear, and he became aware that a soft cold substance had been flung at him, and had fallen at his feet.

A glance told him what it was—a piece of flesh, the e characteristic part of a barrow-pig, which the c ountrymen used for greasing their boots, as it was useless for any other purpose. Pigs were rather p lentiful hereabout, being bred and fattened in lar ge numbers in certain parts of North Wessex. On the other side of the hedge was a stream, whence e, as he now for the first time realized, had come the slight sounds of voices and laughter that had mingled with his dreams. He mounted the bank and looked over the fence. On the further side of the stream stood a small homestead, having a garden an d pig-sties attached; in front of it, beside the b rook, three young women were kneeling, with bucket s and platters beside them containing heaps of pig s' chitterlings, which they were washing in the ru nning water. One or two pairs of eyes slyly glance d up, and perceiving that his attention had at las t been attracted, and that he was watching them, t hey braced themselves for inspection by putting th eir mouths demurely into shape and recommencing the eir rinsing operations with assiduity.

"Thank you!" said Jude severely.

"I didn't throw it, I tell you!" asserted one girl to her neighbour, as if unconscious of the young man's presence.

"Nor I," the second answered.

"Oh, Anny, how can you!" said the third.

"If I had thrown anything at all, it shouldn't hav e been that!"

"Pooh! I don't care for him!" And they laughed and continued their work, without looking up, still o stentatiously accusing each other.

Jude grew sarcastic as he wiped his face, and caug ht their remarks.

"You didn't do it—oh no!" he said to the up-stream one of the three.

She whom he addressed was a fine dark-eyed girl, n ot exactly handsome, but capable of passing as such at a little distance, despite some coarseness of skin and fibre. She had a round and prominent bos om, full lips, perfect teeth, and the rich complex ion of a Cochin hen's egg. She was a complete and substantial female animal—no more, no less; and Ju de was almost certain that to her was attributable the enterprise of attracting his attention from d reams of the humaner letters to what was simmering in the minds around him.

"That you'll never be told," said she deedily.

"Whoever did it was wasteful of other people's property."

"Oh, that's nothing."

"But you want to speak to me, I suppose?"

"Oh yes; if you like to."

"Shall I clamber across, or will you come to the plank above here?"

Perhaps she foresaw an opportunity; for somehow or other the eyes of the brown girl rested in his ow n when he had said the words, and there was a mome ntary flash of intelligence, a dumb announcement o f affinity in posse between herself and him, which, so far as Jude Fawley was concerned, had no sort of premeditation in it. She saw that he had singled her out from the three, as a woman is singled o ut in such cases, for no reasoned purpose of furth er acquaintance, but in commonplace obedience to c onjunctive orders from headquarters, unconsciously received by unfortunate men when the last intenti on of their lives is to be occupied with the femin ine.

Springing to her feet, she said: "Bring back what is lying there."

Jude was now aware that no message on any matter c onnected with her father's business had prompted h er signal to him. He set down his basket of tools, picked up the scrap of offal, beat a pathway for himself with his stick, and got over the hedge. Th ey walked in parallel lines, one on each bank of t he stream, towards the small plank bridge. As the

The schoolmaster was leaving the village, and ever ybody seemed sorry. The miller at Cresscombe lent him the small white tilted cart and horse to carry his goods to the city of his destination, about t wenty miles off, such a vehicle proving of quite s ufficient size for the departing teacher's effects . For the schoolhouse had been partly furnished by the managers, and the only cumbersome article pos sessed by the master, in addition to the packing-c ase of books, was a cottage piano that he had boug ht at an auction during the year in which he thoug ht of learning instrumental music. But the enthusi asm having waned he had never acquired any skill i n playing, and the purchased article had been a pe rpetual trouble to him ever since in moving house. The rector had gone away for the day, being a man who disliked the sight of changes. He did not mean to return till the evening, when the new school-t eacher would have arrived and settled in, and ever ything would be smooth again.

The blacksmith, the farm bailiff, and the schoolma ster himself were standing in perplexed attitudes in the parlour before the instrument. The master h ad remarked that even if he got it into the cart h e should not know what to do with it on his arrival at Christminster, the city he was bound for, sin ce he was only going into temporary lodgings just at first.

A little boy of eleven, who had been thoughtfully assisting in the packing, joined the group of men, and as they rubbed their chins he spoke up, blush ing at the sound of his own voice: "Aunt have got a great fuel-house, and it could be put there, per haps, till you've found a place to settle in, sir."

"A proper good notion," said the blacksmith.

It was decided that a deputation should wait on the e boy's aunt—an old maiden resident—and ask her if she would house the piano till Mr. Phillotson should send for it. The smith and the bailiff started to see about the practicability of the suggested shelter, and the boy and the schoolmaster were lef t standing alone.

"Sorry I am going, Jude?" asked the latter kindly. Tears rose into the boy's eyes, for he was not amo ng the regular day scholars, who came unromantical ly close to the schoolmaster's life, but one who h ad attended the night school only during the prese nt teacher's term of office. The regular scholars, if the truth must be told, stood at the present m oment afar off, like certain historic disciples, i ndisposed to any enthusiastic volunteering of aid. The boy awkwardly opened the book he held in his h and, which Mr. Phillotson had bestowed on him as a parting gift, and admitted that he was sorry.

"So am I," said Mr. Phillotson.

"Why do you go, sir?" asked the boy.

"Ah—that would be a long story. You wouldn't under stand my reasons, Jude. You will, perhaps, when yo u are older."

"I think I should now, sir."

"Well—don't speak of this everywhere. You know what a university is, and a university degree? It is the necessary hallmark of a man who wants to do anything in teaching. My scheme, or dream, is to be a university graduate, and then to be ordained. By going to live at Christminster, or near it, I shall be at headquarters, so to speak, and if my scheme is practicable at all, I consider that being on the spot will afford me a better chance of carrying it out than I should have elsewhere."

The smith and his companion returned. Old Miss Faw ley's fuel-house was dry, and eminently practicabl e; and she seemed willing to give the instrument s tanding-room there. It was accordingly left in the school till the evening, when more hands would be available for removing it; and the schoolmaster g ave a final glance round.

The boy Jude assisted in loading some small articles, and at nine o'clock Mr. Phillotson mounted bes ide his box of books and other impedimenta, and bade his friends good-bye.

the cart moved off. "Be a good boy, remember; and

"I shan't forget you, Jude," he said, smiling, as

be kind to animals and birds, and read all you can . And if ever you come to Christminster remember y ou hunt me out for old acquaintance' sake." The cart creaked across the green, and disappeared round the corner by the rectory-house. The boy re turned to the draw-well at the edge of the greensw ard, where he had left his buckets when he went to help his patron and teacher in the loading. There was a quiver in his lip now and after opening the well-cover to begin lowering the bucket he paused and leant with his forehead and arms against the framework, his face wearing the fixity of a though tful child's who has felt the pricks of life somew hat before his time. The well into which he was lo oking was as ancient as the village itself, and fr om his present position appeared as a long circula r perspective ending in a shining disk of quiverin g water at a distance of a hundred feet down. Ther e was a lining of green moss near the top, and nea rer still the hart's-tongue fern.

He said to himself, in the melodramatic tones of a whimsical boy, that the schoolmaster had drawn at that well scores of times on a morning like this, and would never draw there any more. "I've seen h im look down into it, when he was tired with his d rawing, just as I do now, and when he rested a bit before carrying the buckets home! But he was too clever to bide here any longer—a small sleepy place like this!"

A tear rolled from his eye into the depths of the well. The morning was a little foggy, and the boy's breathing unfurled itself as a thicker fog upon the still and heavy air. His thoughts were interrupted by a sudden outcry:

"Bring on that water, will ye, you idle young harl ican!"

It came from an old woman who had emerged from her door towards the garden gate of a green-thatched cottage not far off. The boy quickly waved a signa I of assent, drew the water with what was a great effort for one of his stature, landed and emptied the big bucket into his own pair of smaller ones, and pausing a moment for breath, started with them across the patch of clammy greensward whereon the well stood—nearly in the centre of the little vil lage, or rather hamlet of Marygreen. It was as old-fashioned as it was small, and it re sted in the lap of an undulating upland adjoining the North Wessex downs. Old as it was, however, th e well-shaft was probably the only relic of the lo cal history that remained absolutely unchanged. Ma ny of the thatched and dormered dwelling-houses ha d been pulled down of late years, and many trees f elled on the green. Above all, the original church , hump-backed, wood-turreted, and quaintly hipped, had been taken down, and either cracked up into h eaps of road-metal in the lane, or utilized as pig -sty walls, garden seats, guard-stones to fences, and rockeries in the flower-beds of the neighbourh ood. In place of it a tall new building of modern Gothic design, unfamiliar to English eyes, had bee n erected on a new piece of ground by a certain ob literator of historic records who had run down fro m London and back in a day. The site whereon so lo ng had stood the ancient temple to the Christian d ivinities was not even recorded on the green and I evel grass-plot that had immemorially been the chu rchyard, the obliterated graves being commemorated by eighteen-penny cast-iron crosses warranted to last five years.

Slender as was Jude Fawley's frame he bore the two brimming house-buckets of water to the cottage wi thout resting. Over the door was a little rectangu lar piece of blue board, on which was painted in y ellow letters, "Drusilla Fawley, Baker." Within the little lead panes of the window—this being one of the few old houses left—were five bottles of swe ets, and three buns on a plate of the willow pattern.

While emptying the buckets at the back of the hous e he could hear an animated conversation in progre ss within-doors between his great-aunt, the Drusil la of the sign-board, and some other villagers. Ha ving seen the school-master depart, they were summ ing up particulars of the event, and indulging in predictions of his future.

"And who's he?" asked one, comparatively a strange r, when the boy entered.

"Well ye med ask it, Mrs. Williams. He's my greatnephew—come since you was last this way." The old inhabitant who answered was a tall, gaunt woman, w ho spoke tragically on the most trivial subject, a nd gave a phrase of her conversation to each audit or in turn. "He come from Mellstock, down in South Wessex, about a year ago—worse luck for 'n, Belin da" (turning to the right) "where his father was I iving, and was took wi' the shakings for death, an d died in two days, as you know, Caroline" (turnin g to the left). "It would ha' been a blessing if G oddy-mighty had took thee too, wi' thy mother and father, poor useless boy! But I've got him here to stay with me till I can see what's to be done wit h un, though I am obliged to let him earn any penn y he can. Just now he's a-scaring of birds for Far mer Troutham. It keeps him out of mischty. Why do ye turn away, Jude?" she continued, as the boy, fe eling the impact of their glances like slaps upon his face, moved aside.

The local washerwoman replied that it was perhaps a very good plan of Miss or Mrs. Fawley's (as they called her indifferently) to have him with her—"t o kip 'ee company in your loneliness, fetch water, shet the winder-shetters o' nights, and help in t he bit o' baking."

Miss Fawley doubted it. ... "Why didn't ye get the s choolmaster to take 'ee to Christminster wi' un, a nd make a scholar of 'ee," she continued, in frown ing pleasantry. "I'm sure he couldn't ha' took a b etter one. The boy is crazy for books, that he is. It runs in our family rather. His cousin Sue is j ust the same—so I've heard; but I have not seen the e child for years, though she was born in this pla ce, within these four walls, as it happened. My ni ece and her husband, after they were married, didn ' get a house of their own for some year or more; and then they only had one till—Well, I won't go i nto that. Jude, my child, don't you ever marry. 'T isn't for the Fawleys to take that step any more. She, their only one, was like a child o' my own, B elinda, till the split come! Ah, that a little mai d should know such changes!"

Jude, finding the general attention again centerin g on himself, went out to the bakehouse, where he ate the cake provided for his breakfast. The end o f his spare time had now arrived, and emerging from the garden by getting over the hedge at the back he pursued a path northward, till he came to a wide and lonely depression in the general level of the upland, which was sown as a corn-field. This vast concave was the scene of his labours for Mr Troutham the farmer, and he descended into the midst of it.

The brown surface of the field went right up towar ds the sky all round, where it was lost by degrees in the mist that shut out the actual verge and ac centuated the solitude. The only marks on the unif ormity of the scene were a rick of last year's pro duce standing in the midst of the arable, the rook s that rose at his approach, and the path athwart the fallow by which he had come, trodden now by he hardly knew whom, though once by many of his own dead family.

"How ugly it is here!" he murmured.

The fresh harrow-lines seemed to stretch like the channellings in a piece of new corduroy, lending a meanly utilitarian air to the expanse, taking awa y its gradations, and depriving it of all history beyond that of the few recent months, though to ev ery clod and stone there really attached associati ons enough and to spare—echoes of songs from ancie nt harvest-days, of spoken words, and of sturdy de eds. Every inch of ground had been the site, first or last, of energy, gaiety, horse-play, bickering s, weariness. Groups of gleaners had squatted in t he sun on every square yard. Love-matches that had populated the adjoining hamlet had been made up t here between reaping and carrying. Under the hedge which divided the field from a distant plantation girls had given themselves to lovers who would no t turn their heads to look at them by the next har vest; and in that ancient cornfield many a man had made love-promises to a woman at whose voice he h ad trembled by the next seed-time after fulfilling them in the church adjoining. But this neither Ju de nor the rooks around him considered. For them i t was a lonely place, possessing, in the one view, only the quality of a work-ground, and in the oth er that of a granary good to feed in. The boy stood under the rick before mentioned, and every few seconds used his clacker or rattle bris kly. At each clack the rooks left off pecking, and rose and went away on their leisurely wings, burn ished like tassets of mail, afterwards wheeling ba

He sounded the clacker till his arm ached, and at length his heart grew sympathetic with the birds' thwarted desires. They seemed, like himself, to be living in a world which did not want them. Why sh ould he frighten them away? They took upon more an d more the aspect of gentle friends and pensioners—the only friends he could claim as being in the l east degree interested in him, for his aunt had of ten told him that she was not. He ceased his rattling, and they alighted anew.

"Poor little dears!" said Jude, aloud. "You shall have some dinner—you shall. There is enough for us all. Farmer Troutham can afford to let you have s ome. Eat, then my dear little birdies, and make a good meal!"

They stayed and ate, inky spots on the nut-brown s oil, and Jude enjoyed their appetite. A magic thre ad of fellow-feeling united his own life with thei rs. Puny and sorry as those lives were, they much resembled his own.

His clacker he had by this time thrown away from h im, as being a mean and sordid instrument, offensi ve both to the birds and to himself as their frien d. All at once he became conscious of a smart blow upon his buttocks, followed by a loud clack, which announced to his surprised senses that the clack er had been the instrument of offence used. The birds and Jude started up simultaneously, and the dazed eyes of the latter beheld the farmer in person, the great Troutham himself, his red face glaring down upon Jude's cowering frame, the clacker swinging in his hand.

"So it's 'Eat my dear birdies,' is it, young man?
'Eat, dear birdies,' indeed! I'll tickle your bree
ches, and see if you say, 'Eat, dear birdies,' aga in in a hurry! And you've been idling at the schoo lmaster's too, instead of coming here, ha'n't ye,
hey? That's how you earn your sixpence a day for k eeping the rooks off my corn!"

Whilst saluting Jude's ears with this impassioned rhetoric, Troutham had seized his left hand with h is own left, and swinging his slim frame round him at arm's-length, again struck Jude on the hind parts with the flat side of Jude's own rattle, till the field echoed with the blows, which were delive red once or twice at each revolution.

"Don't 'ee, sir—please don't 'ee!" cried the whirl ing child, as helpless under the centrifugal tende ncy of his person as a hooked fish swinging to lan d, and beholding the hill, the rick, the plantatio n, the path, and the rooks going round and round h im in an amazing circular race. "I—I sir—only mean t that—there was a good crop in the ground—I saw 'em sow it—and the rooks could h

Not a soul was visible on the hedgeless highway, or on either side of it, and the white road seemed to ascend and diminish till it joined the sky. At the very top it was crossed at right angles by a green "ridgeway"—the Ickneild Street and original Roman road through the district. This ancient track ran east and west for many miles, and down almost to within living memory had been used for driving flocks and herds to fairs and markets. But it was now neglected and overgrown.

The boy had never before strayed so far north as this from the nestling hamlet in which he had been deposited by the carrier from a railway station so uthward, one dark evening some few months earlier, and till now he had had no suspicion that such a wide, flat, low-lying country lay so near at hand, under the very verge of his upland world. The who le northern semicircle between east and west, to a distance of forty or fifty miles, spread itself before him; a bluer, moister atmosphere, evidently, than that he breathed up here.

Not far from the road stood a weather-beaten old b arn of reddish-grey brick and tile. It was known a s the Brown House by the people of the locality. H e was about to pass it when he perceived a ladder against the eaves; and the reflection that the hig her he got, the further he could see, led Jude to stand and regard it. On the slope of the roof two men were repairing the tiling. He turned into the ridgeway and drew towards the barn.

When he had wistfully watched the workmen for some time he took courage, and ascended the ladder til I he stood beside them.

"Well, my lad, and what may you want up here?"
"I wanted to know where the city of Christminster is, if you please."

"Christminster is out across there, by that clump. You can see it—at least you can on a clear day. A h, no, you can't now."

The other tiler, glad of any kind of diversion fro

m the monotony of his labour, had also turned to I ook towards the quarter designated. "You can't oft en see it in weather like this," he said. "The tim e I've noticed it is when the sun is going down in a blaze of flame, and it looks like—I don't know what."

"The heavenly Jerusalem," suggested the serious ur chin.

"Ay—though I should never ha' thought of it myself . ... But I can't see no Christminster to-day." The boy strained his eyes also; yet neither could he see the far-off city. He descended from the bar n, and abandoning Christminster with the versatili ty of his age he walked along the ridge-track, loo king for any natural objects of interest that migh t lie in the banks thereabout. When he repassed th e barn to go back to Marygreen he observed that th e ladder was still in its place, but that the men had finished their day's work and gone away. It was waning towards evening; there was still a f aint mist, but it had cleared a little except in t he damper tracts of subjacent country and along th e river-courses. He thought again of Christminster , and wished, since he had come two or three miles from his aunt's house on purpose, that he could h ave seen for once this attractive city of which he had been told. But even if he waited here it was hardly likely that the air would clear before nigh t. Yet he was loth to leave the spot, for the nort hern expanse became lost to view on retreating tow ards the village only a few hundred yards. He ascended the ladder to have one more look at th e point the men had designated, and perched himsel f on the highest rung, overlying the tiles. He mig ht not be able to come so far as this for many day s. Perhaps if he prayed, the wish to see Christmin ster might be forwarded. People said that, if you prayed, things sometimes came to you, even though they sometimes did not. He had read in a tract that t a man who had begun to build a church, and had n

o money to finish it, knelt down and prayed, and t he money came in by the next post. Another man tri ed the same experiment, and the money did not come ; but he found afterwards that the breeches he kne It in were made by a wicked Jew. This was not disc ouraging, and turning on the ladder Jude knelt on the third rung, where, resting against those above it, he prayed that the mist might rise. He then seated himself again, and waited. In the c ourse of ten or fifteen minutes the thinning mist dissolved altogether from the northern horizon, as it had already done elsewhere, and about a quarte r of an hour before the time of sunset the westwar d clouds parted, the sun's position being partiall y uncovered, and the beams streaming out in visible e lines between two bars of slaty cloud. The boy i mmediately looked back in the old direction. Some way within the limits of the stretch of lands cape, points of light like the topaz gleamed. The air increased in transparency with the lapse of mi nutes, till the topaz points showed themselves to be the vanes, windows, wet roof slates, and other shining spots upon the spires, domes, freestone-wo rk, and varied outlines that were faintly revealed . It was Christminster, unquestionably; either dir ectly seen, or miraged in the peculiar atmosphere. The spectator gazed on and on till the windows and vanes lost their shine, going out almost suddenly like extinguished candles. The vague city became veiled in mist. Turning to the west, he saw that t he sun had disappeared. The foreground of the scen e had grown funereally dark, and near objects put on the hues and shapes of chimaeras. He anxiously descended the ladder, and started hom ewards at a run, trying not to think of giants, He rne the Hunter, Apollyon lying in wait for Christi an, or of the captain with the bleeding hole in hi s forehead and the corpses round him that remutini ed every night on board the bewitched ship. He kne w that he had grown out of belief in these horrors

, yet he was glad when he saw the church tower and the lights in the cottage windows, even though th is was not the home of his birth, and his great-au nt did not care much about him.

Inside and round about that old woman's "shop" win dow, with its twenty-four little panes set in lead -work, the glass of some of them oxidized with age , so that you could hardly see the poor penny articles exhibited within, and forming part of a stock which a strong man could have carried, Jude had h is outer being for some long tideless time. But hi s dreams were as gigantic as his surroundings were small.

Through the solid barrier of cold cretaceous uplan d to the northward he was always beholding a gorge ous city—the fancied place he had likened to the n ew Jerusalem, though there was perhaps more of the painter's imagination and less of the diamond mer chant's in his dreams thereof than in those of the Apocalyptic writer. And the city acquired a tangi bility, a permanence, a hold on his life, mainly f rom the one nucleus of fact that the man for whose knowledge and purposes he had so much reverence w as actually living there; not only so, but living among the more thoughtful and mentally shining one s therein.

In sad wet seasons, though he knew it must rain at Christminster too, he could hardly believe that i t rained so drearily there. Whenever he could get away from the confines of the hamlet for an hour o r two, which was not often, he would steal off to the Brown House on the hill and strain his eyes pe rsistently; sometimes to be rewarded by the sight of a dome or spire, at other times by a little smo ke, which in his estimate had some of the mysticis m of incense.

Then the day came when it suddenly occurred to him that if he ascended to the point of view after da rk, or possibly went a mile or two further, he wou

Id see the night lights of the city. It would be n ecessary to come back alone, but even that conside ration did not deter him, for he could throw a lit tle manliness into his mood, no doubt.

The project was duly executed. It was not late whe n he arrived at the place of outlook, only just af ter dusk, but a black north-east sky, accompanied by a wind from the same quarter, made the occasion dark enough. He was rewarded; but wha

Walking somewhat slowly by reason of his concentration, the boy—an ancient man in some phases of tho ught, much younger than his years in others—was overtaken by a light-footed pedestrian, whom, notwit hstanding the gloom, he could perceive to be wearing an extraordinarily tall hat, a swallow-tailed coat, and a watch-chain that danced madly and threw around scintillations of sky-light as its owners wung along upon a pair of thin legs and noiseless boots. Jude, beginning to feel lonely, endeavoured to keep up with him.

"Well, my man! I'm in a hurry, so you'll have to w alk pretty fast if you keep alongside of me. Do yo u know who I am?"

"Yes, I think. Physician Vilbert?"

"Ah—I'm known everywhere, I see! That comes of being a public benefactor."

Vilbert was an itinerant quack-doctor, well known to the rustic population, and absolutely unknown t o anybody else, as he, indeed, took care to be, to avoid inconvenient investigations. Cottagers form ed his only patients, and his Wessex-wide repute w as among them alone. His position was humbler and his field more obscure than those of the quacks wi th capital and an organized system of advertising. He was, in fact, a survival. The distances he tra versed on foot were enormous, and extended nearly the whole length and breadth of Wessex. Jude had o ne day seen him selling a pot of coloured lard to an old woman as a certain cure for a bad leg, the woman arranging to pay a guinea, in instalments of a shilling a fortnight, for the precious salve, w hich, according to the physician, could only be ob tained from a particular animal which grazed on Mo unt Sinai, and was to be captured only at great ri sk to life and limb. Jude, though he already had h is doubts about this gentleman's medicines, felt h im to be unquestionably a travelled personage, and one who might be a trustworthy source of informat ion on matters not strictly professional.

"I s'pose you've been to Christminster, Physician?

"I have—many times," replied the long thin man. "T hat's one of my centres."

"It's a wonderful city for scholarship and religio n?"

"You'd say so, my boy, if you'd seen it. Why, the very sons of the old women who do the washing of t he colleges can talk in Latin—not good Latin, that I admit, as a critic: dog-Latin—cat-Latin, as we used to call it in my undergraduate days."

"And Greek?"

"Well—that's more for the men who are in training for bishops, that they may be able to read the New Testament in the original."

"I want to learn Latin and Greek myself."

"A lofty desire. You must get a grammar of each to ngue."

"I mean to go to Christminster some day."

"Whenever you do, you say that Physician Vilbert i s the only proprietor of those celebrated pills th at infallibly cure all disorders of the alimentary system, as well as asthma and shortness of breath . Two and threepence a box—specially licensed by t he government stamp."

"Can you get me the grammars if I promise to say i t hereabout?"

"I'll sell you mine with pleasure—those I used as a student."

"Oh, thank you, sir!" said Jude gratefully, but in gasps, for the amazing speed of the physician's w alk kept him in a dog-trot which was giving him a stitch in the side.

"I think you'd better drop behind, my young man. N ow I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll get you the gr ammars, and give you a first lesson, if you'll rem ember, at every house in the village, to recommend Physician Vilbert's golden ointment, life-drops, and female pills."

"Where will you be with the grammars?"

"I shall be passing here this day fortnight at pre cisely this hour of five-and-twenty minutes past s even. My movements are as truly timed as those of the planets in their courses."

"Here I'll be to meet you," said Jude.

"With orders for my medicines?"

"Yes, Physician."

Jude then dropped behind, waited a few minutes to recover breath, and went home with a consciousness of having struck a blow for Christminster.

Through the intervening fortnight he ran about and smiled outwardly at his inward thoughts, as if th ey were people meeting and nodding to him—smiled w ith that singularly beautiful irradiation which is seen to spread on young faces at the inception of some glorious idea, as if a supernatural lamp wer e held inside their transparent natures, giving ri se to the flattering fancy that heaven lies about them then.

He honestly performed his promise to the man of ma ny cures, in whom he now sincerely believed, walking miles hither and thither among the surrounding hamlets as the Physician's agent in advance. On the evening appointed he stood motionless on the plateau, at the place where he had parted from Vilber t, and there awaited his approach. The road-physician was fairly up to time; but, to the surprise of Jude on striking into his pace, which the pedestrian did not diminish by a single unit of force, the latter seemed hardly to recognize his young companion, though with the lapse of the fortnight the evenings had grown light. Jude thought it might perhaps be owing to his wearing another hat, and he saluted the physician with dignity.

"Well, my boy?" said the latter abstractedly.

"I've come," said Jude.

"You? who are you? Oh yes—to be sure! Got any orders, lad?"

"Yes." And Jude told him the names and addresses of the cottagers who were willing to test the virtu es of the world-renowned pills and salve. The quac k mentally registered these with great care.

"And the Latin and Greek grammars?" Jude's voice t rembled with anxiety.

"What about them?"

"You were to bring me yours, that you used before you took your degree."

"Ah, yes, yes! Forgot all about it—all! So many li ves depending on my attention, you see, my man, th at I can't give so much thought as I would like to other things."

Jude controlled himself sufficiently long to make sure of the truth; and he repeated, in a voice of dry misery, "You haven't brought 'em!"

"No. But you must get me some more orders from sic k people, and I'll bring the grammars next time." Jude dropped behind. He was an unsophisticated boy , but the gift of sudden insight which is sometime s vouchsafed to children showed him all at once wh at shoddy humanity the quack was made of. There wa s to be no intellectual light from this source. The leaves dropped from his imaginary crown of laure I; he turned to a gate, leant against it, and cried bitterly.

The disappointment was followed by an interval of blankness. He might, perhaps, have obtained gramma rs from Alfredston, but to do that required money, and a knowledge of what books to order; and thoug h physically comfortable, he was in such absolute dependence as to be without a farthing of his own. At this date Mr. Phillotson sent for his pianofort e, and it gave Jude a lead. Why should he not writ e to the schoolmaster, and ask him to be so kind a s to get him the grammars in Christminster? He mig ht slip a letter inside the case of the instrument, and it would be sure to reach the desired eyes. Why not ask him to send any old second-hand copies, which would have the charm of being mellowed by the university atmosphere?

To tell his aunt of his intention would be to defe

at it. It was necessary to act alone.

After a further consideration of a few days he did act, and on the day of the piano's departure, whi ch happened to be his next birthday, clandestinely placed the letter inside the packing-case, direct ed to his much-admired friend, being afraid to rev eal the operation to his aunt Drusilla, lest she s hould discover his motive, and compel him to aband on his scheme.

The piano was despatched, and Jude waited days and weeks, calling every morning at the cottage post office before his great-aunt was stirring. At last a packet did indeed arrive at the village, and he saw from the ends of it that it contained two thin books. He took it away into a lonely place, and sat down on a felled elm to open it.

Ever since his first ecstasy or vision of Christminster and its possibilities, Jude had meditated mu ch and curiously on the probable sort of proc

During the three or four succeeding years a quaint and singular vehicle might have been discerned mo ving along the lanes and by-roads near Marygreen, driven in a quaint and singular way.

In the course of a month or two after the receipt of the books Jude had grown callous to the shabby trick played him by the dead languages. In fact, h is disappointment at the nature of those tongues h ad, after a while, been the means of still further glorifying the erudition of Christminster. To acq uire languages, departed or living in spite of suc h obstinacies as he now knew them inherently to po ssess, was a herculean performance which gradually led him on to a greater interest in it than in th e presupposed patent process. The mountain-weight of material under which the ideas lay in those dus ty volumes called the classics piqued him into a d ogged, mouselike subtlety of attempt to move it pi ecemeal.

He had endeavoured to make his presence tolerable to his crusty maiden aunt by assisting her to the best of his ability, and the business of the littl e cottage bakery had grown in consequence. An aged horse with a hanging head had been purchased for eight pounds at a sale, a creaking cart with a whi ty-brown tilt obtained for a few pounds more, and in this turn-out it became Jude's business thrice a week to carry loaves of bread to the villagers a nd solitary cotters immediately round Marygreen. The singularity aforesaid lay, after all, less in the conveyance itself than in Jude's manner of con ducting it along its route. Its interior was the s cene of most of Jude's education by "private study ." As soon as the horse had learnt the road and th e houses at which he was to pause awhile, the boy, seated in front, would slip the reins over his ar m, ingeniously fix open, by means of a strap attac hed to the tilt, the volume he was reading, spread the dictionary on his knees, and plunge into the simpler passages from Caesar, Virgil, or Horace, a s the case might be, in his purblind stumbling way , and with an expenditure of labour that would hav e made a tender-hearted pedagogue shed tears; yet somehow getting at the meaning of what he read, an d divining rather than beholding the spirit of the original, which often to his mind was something e lse than that which he was taught to look for. The only copies he had been able to lay hands on w ere old Delphin editions, because they were supers eded, and therefore cheap. But, bad for idle schoo lboys, it did so happen that they were passably go od for him. The hampered and lonely itinerant cons cientiously covered up the marginal readings, and used them merely on points of construction, as he would have used a comrade or tutor who should have happened to be passing by. And though Jude may ha ve had little chance of becoming a scholar by thes e rough and ready means, he was in the way of gett ing into the groove he wished to follow.

While he was busied with these ancient pages, which had already been thumbed by hands possibly in the grave, digging out the thoughts of these minds so remote yet so near, the bony old horse pursued his rounds, and Jude would be aroused from the woes of Dido by the stoppage of his cart and the voice of some old woman crying, "Two to-day, baker, and I return this stale one."

He was frequently met in the lanes by pedestrians and others without his seeing them, and by degrees the people of the neighbourhood began to talk about his method of combining work and play (such the y considered his reading to be), which, though probably convenient enough to himself, was not altoge ther a safe proceeding for other travellers along the same roads. There were murmurs. Then a private resident of an adjoining place informed the local policeman that the baker's boy should not be allowed to read while driving, and insisted that it was the constable's duty to catch him in the act, and take him to the police court at Alfredston, and get him fined for dangerous practices on the highw ay. The policeman thereupon lay in wait for Jude, and one day accosted him and cautioned him. As Jude had to get up at three o'clock in the morn ing to heat the oven, and mix and set in the bread that he distributed later in the day, he was obli ged to go to bed at night immediately after laying the sponge; so that if he could not read his clas sics on the highways he could hardly study at all. The only thing to be done was, therefore, to keep a sharp eye ahead and around him as well as he co uld in the circumstances, and slip away his books as soon as anybody loomed in the distance, the pol iceman in particular. To do that official justice, he did not put himself much in the way of Jude's bread-cart, considering that in such a lonely dist rict the chief danger was to Jude himself, and oft en on seeing the white tilt over the hedges he wou ld move in another direction.

On a day when Fawley was getting quite advanced, b eing now about sixteen, and had been stumbling thr ough the "Carmen Sæculare," on his way home, he fo und himself to be passing over the high edge of th e plateau by the Brown House. The light had change d, and it was the sense of this which had caused h im to look up. The sun was going down, and the ful I moon was rising simultaneously behind the woods in the opposite quarter. His mind had become so im pregnated with the poem that, in a moment of the s ame impulsive emotion which years before had cause d him to kneel on the ladder, he stopped the horse , alighted, and glancing round to see that nobody was in sight, knelt down on the roadside bank with open book. He turned first to the shiny goddess, who seemed to look so softly and critically at his doings, then to the disappearing luminary on the other hand, as he began:

"Phœbe silvarumque potens Diana!"

The horse stood still till he had finished the hym n, which Jude repeated under the sway of a polythe istic fancy that he would never have thought of hu mouring in broad daylight.

Reaching home, he mused over his curious superstit ion, innate or acquired, in doing this, and the st range forgetfulness which had led to such a lapse from common sense and custom in one who wished, ne xt to being a scholar, to be a Christian divine. I t had all come of reading heathen works exclusivel y. The more he thought of it the more convinced he was of his inconsistency. He began to wonder whet her he could be reading quite the right books for his object in life. Certainly there seemed little harmony between this pagan literature and the medi æval colleges at Christminster, that ecclesiastica I romance in stone.

Ultimately he decided that in his sheer love of re ading he had taken up a wrong emotion for a Christ ian young man. He had dabbled in Clarke's Homer, b ut had never yet worked much at the New Testament in the Greek, though he possessed a copy, obtained by post from a second-hand bookseller. He abandon ed the now familiar lonic for a new dialect, and f or a long time onward limited his reading almost e ntirely to the Gospels and Epistles in Griesbach's text. Moreover, on going into Alfredston one day, he was introduced to patristic literature by find ing at the bookseller's some volumes of the Father s which had been left behind by an insolvent clerg yman of the neighbourhood.

As another outcome of this change of groove he vis ited on Sundays all the churches within a walk, an d deciphered the Latin inscriptions on fifteenth-c entury brasses and tombs. On one of these pilgrima ges he met with a hunch-backed old woman of great intelligence, who read everything she could lay he r hands on, and she told him more yet of the roman tic charms of the city of light and lore. Thither he resolved as firmly as ever to go.

But how live in that city? At present he had no in come at all. He had no trade or calling of any dig nity or stability whatever on which he could subsist while carrying out an intellectual labour which might spread over many years.

What was most required by citizens? Food, clothing, and shelter. An income from any work in preparing the first would be too meagre; for making the se cond he felt a distaste; the preparation of the third requisite he inclined to. They built in a city; therefore he would learn to build. He thought of his unknown uncle, his cousin Susanna's father, an ecclesiastical worker in metal, and somehow medi æval art in any material was a trade for which he had rather a fancy. He could not go far wrong in following his uncle's footsteps, and engaging himse If awhile with the carcases that contained the schoolar souls.

As a preliminary he obtained some small blocks of freestone, metal not being available, and suspending his studies awhile, occupied his spare half-hours in copying the heads and capitals in his parish church.

There was a stone-mason of a humble kind in Alfred ston, and as soon as he had found a substitute for himself in his aunt's little business, he offered his services to this man for a trifling wage. Her e Jude had the opportunity of learning at least th e rudiments of freestone-working. Some time later he went to a church-builder in the same place, and under the architect's direction became handy at r estoring the dilapidated masonries of several vill age churches round about.

Not forgetting that he was only following up this handicraft as a prop to lean on while he prepared those greater engines which he flattered himself w ould be better fitted for him, he yet was interest ed in his pursuit on its own account. He now had I odgings during the week in the little town, whence he returned to Marygreen village every Saturday e

At this memorable date of his life he was, one Sat urday, returning from Alfredston to Marygreen abou t three o'clock in the afternoon. It was fine, war m, and soft summer weather, and he walked with his tools at his back, his little chisels clinking fa intly against the larger ones in his basket. It be ing the end of the week he had left work early, an d had come out of the town by a round-about route which he did not usually frequent, having promised to call at a flour-mill near Cresscombe to execut e a commission for his aunt.

He was in an enthusiastic mood. He seemed to see h is way to living comfortably in Christminster in t he course of a year or two, and knocking at the do ors of one of those strongholds of learning of whi ch he had dreamed so much. He might, of course, ha ve gone there now, in some capacity or other, but he preferred to enter the city with a little more assurance as to means than he could be said to fee I at present. A warm self-content suffused him whe n he considered what he had already done. Now and then as he went along he turned to face the peeps of country on either side of him. But he hardly sa w them; the act was an automatic repetition of wha t he had been accustomed to do when less occupied; and the one matter which really engaged him was t he mental estimate of his progress thus far. "I have acquired quite an average student's power Thave acquired quite an average student's power to read the common ancient classics, Latin in part icular." This was true, Jude possessing a facility in that language which enabled him with great eas e to himself to beguile his lonely walks by imagin ary conversations therein.

"I have read two books of the Iliad, besides being pretty familiar with passages such as the speech of Phœnix in the ninth book, the fight of Hector a nd Ajax in the fourteenth, the appearance of Achil les unarmed and his heavenly armour in the eightee nth, and the funeral games in the twenty-third. I have also done some Hesiod, a little scrap of Thuc ydides, and a lot of the Greek Testament... I wish there was only one dialect all the same.

"I have done some mathematics, including the first six and the eleventh and twelfth books of Euclid; and algebra as far as simple equations.

"I know something of the Fathers, and something of Roman and English history.

"These things are only a beginning. But I shall no t make much farther advance here, from the difficu lty of getting books. Hence I must next concentrat e all my energies on settling in Christminster. On ce there I shall so advance, with the assistance I shall there get, that my present knowledge will a ppear to me but as childish ignorance. I must save money, and I will; and one of those colleges shal I open its doors to me—shall welcome whom now it w ould spurn, if I wait twenty years for the welcome

"I'll be D.D. before I have done!"

And then he continued to dream, and thought he might become even a bishop by leading a pure, energet ic, wise, Christian life. And what an example he would set! If his income were £5000 a year, he would give away £4500 in one form and another, and live sumptuously (for him) on the remainder. Well, on second thoughts, a bishop was absurd. He would draw the line at an archdeacon. Perhaps a man could be as good and as learned and as useful in the cap acity of archdeacon as in that of bishop. Yet he thought of the bishop again.

"Meanwhile I will read, as soon as I am settled in Christminster, the books I have not been able to get hold of here: Livy, Tacitus, Herodotus, Æschyl us, Sophocles, Aristophanes—"

"Ha, ha, ha! Hoity-toity!" The sounds were express ed in light voices on the other side of the hedge, but he did not notice them. His thoughts went on: "—Euripides, Plato, Aristotle, Lucretius, Epictetu s, Seneca, Antoninus. Then I must master other things: the Fathers thoroughly; Bede and ecclesiastic

"Hoity-toity!"

"—but I can work hard. I have staying power in abundance, thank God! and it is that which tells... Yes, Christminster shall be my Alma Mater; and I'll be her beloved son, in whom she shall be well pleas ed."

In his deep concentration on these transactions of the future Jude's walk had slackened, and he was now standing quite still, looking at the ground as though the future were thrown thereon by a magic lantern. On a sudden something smacked him sharply in the ear, and he became aware that a soft cold substance had been flung at him, and had fallen at his feet.

A glance told him what it was—a piece of flesh, the e characteristic part of a barrow-pig, which the c ountrymen used for greasing their boots, as it was useless for any other purpose. Pigs were rather p lentiful hereabout, being bred and fattened in lar ge numbers in certain parts of North Wessex. On the other side of the hedge was a stream, whence e, as he now for the first time realized, had come the slight sounds of voices and laughter that had mingled with his dreams. He mounted the bank and looked over the fence. On the further side of the stream stood a small homestead, having a garden an d pig-sties attached; in front of it, beside the b rook, three young women were kneeling, with bucket s and platters beside them containing heaps of pig s' chitterlings, which they were washing in the ru nning water. One or two pairs of eyes slyly glance d up, and perceiving that his attention had at las t been attracted, and that he was watching them, t hey braced themselves for inspection by putting th eir mouths demurely into shape and recommencing the eir rinsing operations with assiduity.

"Thank you!" said Jude severely.

"I didn't throw it, I tell you!" asserted one girl

to her neighbour, as if unconscious of the young man's presence.

"Nor I," the second answered.

"Oh, Anny, how can you!" said the third.

"If I had thrown anything at all, it shouldn't hav e been that!"

"Pooh! I don't care for him!" And they laughed and continued their work, without looking up, still o stentatiously accusing each other.

Jude grew sarcastic as he wiped his face, and caug ht their remarks.

"You didn't do it—oh no!" he said to the up-stream one of the three.

She whom he addressed was a fine dark-eyed girl, n ot exactly handsome, but capable of passing as such at a little distance, despite some coarseness of skin and fibre. She had a round and prominent bos om, full lips, perfect teeth, and the rich complex ion of a Cochin hen's egg. She was a complete and substantial female animal—no more, no less; and Ju de was almost certain that to her was attributable the enterprise of attracting his attention from d reams of the humaner letters to what was simmering in the minds around him.

"That you'll never be told," said she deedily.

"Whoever did it was wasteful of other people's property."

"Oh, that's nothing."

"But you want to speak to me, I suppose?"

"Oh yes; if you like to."

"Shall I clamber across, or will you come to the plank above here?"

Perhaps she foresaw an opportunity; for somehow or other the eyes of the brown girl rested in his ow n when he had said the words, and there was a mome ntary flash of intelligence, a dumb announcement o f affinity in posse between herself and him, which, so far as Jude Fawley was concerned, had no sort of premeditation in it. She saw that he had singled her out from the three, as a woman is singled o ut in such cases, for no reasoned purpose of furth er acquaintance, but in commonplace obedience to c onjunctive orders from headquarters, unconsciously received by unfortunate men when the last intenti on of their lives is to be occupied with the femin ine.

Springing to her feet, she said: "Bring back what is lying there."

Jude was now aware that no message on any matter c onnected with her father's business had prompted h er signal to him. He set down his basket of tools, picked up the scrap of offal, beat a pathway for himself with his stick, and got over the hedge. Th ey walked in parallel lines, one on each bank of t he stream, towards the small plank bridge. As the

Dear Secretary Scott Angelle,

This is a request that you remember that you, in your position as Secretary of the Bureau of SAFETY and ENVIRONMENTAL ENFORCEMENT, are a servant of the American People. You are NOT a servant of the oil industry! The very definition of your job is to protect the safety of the people and the integrity of the environment!

I just had the unfortunate experience of seeing one of your speeches and am compelled to give you back some of your own words. It is YOU who are "punishing innocent Americans" everywhere in order to achieve YOUR "unrealistic political agenda"! YOU are the one who needs to "keep the conversation real"! America is MORE than ready to be done with coal and oil to say nothing of dangerous and polluting offshore drilling. Lesser countries than ours have moved toward 100% renewable energy and are set to meet those goals in less than 20 years. People like you are causing the U.S. to be left behind like an at risk student. Renewable energy is real and achievable!

Your proposed overhaul of the "Well Control Rule" in order to save oil companies over $986 million dollars at the expense of worker and environmental safety is unconscionable! It shows us who you really serve and it is NOT the PEOPLE of this nation. It shows that you are NOT qualified for the office you hold which was CREATED EXPRESSLY TO PROTECT WORKERS AND THE ENVIRONMENT; NOT OIL COMPANIES! Stop thinking about who is paying you and start thinking about what you are supposed to be doing! It wouldn't hurt if you could also put the future of the planet, and your children above the almighty dollar. Sincerely,

One of the people for whom you work, Sheila Humann 6:56 AM

Aye mate, just wanted to tell you that you should represent your countrymen over big buisness. Don't forget about those you serve. Putting your number out like this for "buisness" is very sketchy; not to mention foolish. As now you've opened the floodgates eh? Anyway hope to see you being honest. Peace

Scott Angelle, in 1912, when Theodore Roosevelt was shot before giving a campaign speech, he continued and pulled out his manuscript, saying "it takes more than one bullet to kill a Bull Moose." If you had 1/10th the strength, care for nature, backbone, and morals and ethics of Teddy, I wouldn't have to be sending this rebuke, along with undoubtedly thousands of others.

Just learned that you are in charge of environmental safety for the Department of the Interior. Is it correct that you have given out this cell number to industry representatives which you are over seeing in order to give them direct access to you for helping the indudtry. As a citizen who you are charged with protecting from polluters how can you fulfill your responsibilities with all of the conflicts of interest you have. Please stop oil from getting into our drinking water. Thank you. Stephen Pickard.

Dir. Angelle, I am CEO (Charles Cole) and my company CBP distributes alkali neutral products that are 18,000 PSI, 4,500 degree F (thermal rating), impermeable, cementitious products (our product was used for the new NASA launch shuttle pad). Our aggregate mix is certified by the EPA for use in farming, and shipped by barge, rail, and truck from our facilities. The best part is our product while 5x the PSI of concrete is on average 1/3rd the price of concrete. At 18,000 PSI and 1/3rd the cost of concrete we are more than confident we can eliminate the issues associated with bad cement jobs that have plagued off shore drilling rigs. We don't need to adjust formularies for various well applications and we consistently achieve 18,000 PSI or more than 3x other products in the market. I'd like to know if your office would be interested in more information. Kind Regards, Charles Cole

Hi Scott! Are you still using your position in the Federal government to solicit "business opportunities?" Because that's a BIG ethics violation, in case nobody has let you know. I mean, i get how a trumpeteer doesn't understand that, given their willful ignorance and all, but damn. A 10-year-old in a civics class gets THAT.

b) (6)

Maybe somebody can teach you why it's important to care for the environment, which is for everybody, even you, even your grandchildren, who will never be rich enough to escape our destruction of it.

Using the phone to cover up your shady business deals with the coal "industry" is so gangster. You know, like RICO violation gangster. You know, because phone calls "aren't a matter of public record." Lol! That would be naive if it wasn't so disgusting.

Hey Scott. Just wanted to let you know that you seem to be a deeply unethical corporate stooge. Enjoy the view from the wrong side of history. I know this is super weird but maybe don't make yourself quite so accessible to oil companies. Comes across just a little thirsty, ya know? PUBLIC RECORD.

And your corruption allowing oil industry to increase safety violations is disgusting. Probably profitable to you personally but not to America which is your JOB.

So resign. Trump makes me throw up in my mouth. As his fellow swamp creature you need to go away.

Hey bro can I get some of that big oil bribe money, I gotta graduate college

7:04 AM

(b) (6)

But for real tho, is it worth it poisoning the ocean just to have big daddy oil put a few extra dollars in your pocket? You have the responsibility to keep Americans safe, and keep the giant oil companies that have been profiting off the destruction of our environment in check. Take your pick, but if you choose turn your back on the country you've been (for some reason) selected to protect in some small regard, there will be no peace for you. History is never kind to a spineless shill.

Hey Scott, I just wanted to let you know how much I respect the work you do for this country. It's so brave of you, being willing to shun the wellbeing of our planet and deny policies that can bolster our health and the economy so you can make an extra buck. That kind of greed is what we need more of in Washington. We need to literally and figuratively poison the waterhole because (as I'm sure you agree) it is time for this world and it's people to die. It's people like you, hastening the death of the country, that deserve all the wealth you can get so more can die faster. Love you brother, I'm honored to go down in this sinking ship with you my captain. I'm just gonna say it because I know you agree - WHITE POWER FUCK THE JEWS, LET THIS COUNTRY ROT MAGA

Hey so I love oil but I still hate you. I'm from Louisiana and I miss the swamps down there. You bringing the swamp to D.C now. I hope you keep in mind those swamps down in Louisiana and don't kill all the animals down dere. But I guess we too late naw. So sad you gotta hate so much and can't believe in da love that Louisiana MOST likely showed you. So please just give up and stay inside yo house until the world falls apart from all the extra water from the melted ice caps and hopefully people don't take all your stuff.

Hey Scott! This is the CEO of Benson Industries... The American people are completely ready for renewable energy: renewables are the only long term option for a sustainable human habitat on Earth. Stop pursuing oil industry expansion, regulate drilling properly, educate yourself, hold industry execs responsible for environmental impacts, and stop being such a corporate puppet. This is Anders, BTW.

Sorry. I know I'm supposed to call so there won't be a written record of our correspondence, but you wouldn't pick up. Please stop rolling back regulations that are written in blood. You are killing people and our planet. Thanks.

I just watched one of your videos where you give your phone number.

YOU ARE IN CHARGE of the E(f@cking)PA! Is money in your pocket worth more than the health of millions? I'm sure im not the first to ask you this, am I? I don't have any kids, I've been a widow for 3 years and I just hit the ripe ol age of 54...so it's really no skin off my nose but don't you want to do the right thing? Or is money and power that...idk the word...all-consuming, better than a cigarette after sex?, soul-stealing?, what? Cos if I know the answer to this I can, maybe just maybe start to understand this new world I live in. Please respond in some way. I truly want to know the answer!

Is it true that you are rolling back the safety regulations and environmental protection rules put in place as a result of the catastrophic BP oil rig failure that caused irreversible damage to the Gulf of Mexico coastline?

Hi.

I think there might be a large amount of oil beneath our home (directly under my baby sons room) right below the crawl space. Sometimes, we can smell the oil reeking through the floor. Sometimes, he wakes in slightly oily sheets and blanket. We would like to possibly drill, looking for "liquid gold" but are not prepared to move. Could we possibly move his crib a foot or two, and have a rig set up in his room?

9:25 PM

Thanks!

(b) (6)

Hi.

I think there might be a large amount of oil beneath our home (directly under my baby sons room) right below the crawl space. Sometimes, we can smell the oil reeking through the floor. Sometimes, he wakes in slightly oily sheets and blanket. We would like to possibly drill, looking for "liquid gold" but are not prepared to move. Could we possibly move his crib a foot or two, and have a rig set up in his room?

10:11 PM

Thanks!

Please, Mr. Angelle, I'm writing to request that you do more to protect the fishermen and American families from the pollution caused by offshore oil drilling. They need more regulations to keep them in check. Protect the people you're working for and not oil company profits.

We have more oil than we need, we can't replace our environment!

Please, Mr. Angelle, I'm writing to request that you do more to protect the fishermen and American families from the pollution caused by offshore oil drilling. They need more regulations to keep them in check. Protect the people you're working for and not oil company profits.

Mr Angelle, Thanks for supplying your private number although for some reason  $\stackrel{\bullet}{>}$  no one answers... Therefore, even though you requested phone calls, I'm forced to text and make this public record. Sorry!  $\stackrel{\bullet}{\square}$

You all had some horrific damages and loss of marine life in the Gulf with the biggest oil spill on record. One, I might add, that has not ever been truly environmentally cleaned up but merely swept under the rug to look presentable while continuing to plague the Gulf, it's lands, waters, and all life forms, including we humans, for decades, if not hundreds of years to come. There are even those who say because of the negligent action of the spill, it's bungled mis-management and handling attempts to recover and contain, complete lack of transparency and failure to do the right thing, a colossal and an underwhelmingly inadequate cleanup wasn't dealt with immediately and properly.

The Gulf and adjacent affected regions will Never recover to prespill conditions.

Now I understand, after your million dollar a year job with Sonoco Logistics, you were actually hired as a head swamp creature for the EPA and have proposed we significantly loosen safety requirements saving us nearly $1 Billion over the next decade. And by "us" I mean your friends, the ones at the companies drilling for gas, the ones you encourage to call you, not text (texting is public record, don't you know ) during speeches where you give out your number (*) so they can pursue "business opportunities" with you, the ones, no doubt, who contributed to your political campaign when you were Lt Governor - NOT the citizens of the U.S. of America for whom you work and have sworn a duty. Tell me, Mr Angelle, what is the going price for your loyalty these days?

What was it that finally made you throw the futures of your children and grandchildren under the bus, condemning them to clean up after you and to futures fraught with climate change disasters. A future served with ruination by people like you - swamp creatures - who continue to be part of and even escalate the problem instead of being part of the solution, despite irreproachable scientific evidence to the contrary.

Tell me, Mr Angelle, what is in it for you? Power? Fame? Money? What did it take to buy you?

Feel free to call or text me to discuss. Kimberly Rice, Minnesota

My name is Clifford Zimmerman.

My US Patent # 8343030 "Harmonic And Overtone Audio Therapy For Autism And Regulated Emotional And Psychological Disorders".

Web-Site: www.SoundTherapyTechnologies.com

My Digital Medicine Technology is a cure/reversal of symptoms for:

- 1. Autism
- 2. PTSD
- 3. Concussions

Instead of taking years and costing millions, my study will take 10 weeks in order to obtain medical/scientific proof that can be marketed to

1. The US Veterans Administration

- 2. The NFL
- 3. US Federal Prisons

etc.

The ROI (Rate Of Return), is easily in the Billions.

Kindly text me your e.mail address so that I may send you more detailed - both scientific and business - information.

Warm Regards,

Cliff Zimmerman

So you have a job regulating safety that effects the environment, you know the air and water...oh and of course wildlife. Obviously nothing of importance, if you dont give a shit about the health and future of our children and future generations. You are, like this POS president very much the problem, greed and ignorance make you extremely dangerous....there are literally billions of other people in this world besides you handful of greedy sorry asses. Just a suggestion, take your head out of your ass and do the right thing, protect the people and the environment we dont get another one after this one is destroyed.....I hate that all you old fucks do not care about the damage you do because you are so close to expiring....not your problem right? Just fatten your bank accounts that is your only concern, well here's a shocker....you bastards can't take it with you and your family will get to live with your legacy of how big a POS you truly are....there's no help for Trump and M! cConnell, Nunes, Ryan, Lindsey, Jordan, Grassley, Duncan, Gowdy, just name a few. Not to mention the cabinet of corruption he installed, do the job as it was meant save something for our children

Hello Mr. Angelle,

I saw you on John Oliver tonight and here's what I think. You're destroying the planet for my generation and the generations to come. I do not want to have to clean up you're mess so I would really appreciate it if you would just take a minute and consider the future.

I'm sure you think that I am just a naive teenager looking for attention from a higher powers, but in fact, I am just trying to protect my future. Please consider that you are ruining the planet for me.

You're a real corrupt piece of shit, aren't you? You're a cartoon of an oil tycoon, and it'll be super easy to demonize you once parts of the US become unfarmable and unlivable. I wonder if your money will be enough of a barrier. You'll have to let me know how it goes.
